Why We Started KMS

Klotz Media Solutions

Klotz Media Solutions is a partnership between Thomas Klotz (founder of Klotz Digital) and Phil Collins (founder of Clyde Broadcast). Between us we have over 100 years experience in the design, manufacture and installation of analog and digital equipment and systems for the radio broadcast sector.

We established KMS to address a gap we both saw in the market. Most manufacturers focus on large stations and networks, while local and community stations, which play an especially important role right now by giving listeners familiar voices, a sense of home and the local stories they won't find anywhere else, are barely noticed. Many of these broadcasters, particularly those in remote locations, with limited budgets and little in-house technical support, were being offered equipment that was more complex and more expensive than they needed.

Our approach is straightforward. We design products that do what broadcasters actually need, built to last, simple to operate and practical to maintain, without the technical overkill that drives up cost and creates dependency on specialist support.

Aircaster mixers are designed and assembled in the UK. We work directly with stations and through a growing network of regional partners.
